

23 READING MEN FOR CAMP MEADE END FIRST DRAFT

Quotas From Districts Three and Four to Fill Army Vacancies

NEXT WILL GO FEB. 23

The departure of more Reading men yesterday to Camp Meade and the calling of others for examinations before the local draft boards became a realistic feature of the first step in "strafing" the Hun following the report last night of the loss of the Tuscania.

Reading's drafted men will respond more eagerly from today to the end of conscription with the thought of the loss of comrade soldiers by the acts of the despicable Hun who fights from the cover of the sea to strike and run.

The next 20 per cent. of the drafted men, who will begin moving Feb. 23rd will move into the national army with the determination to avenge the death of their fellow members of democracy's army. Draft officials last night predicted a total elimination of exemption pleas on any grounds other than those of dependability, through the effects of the Tuscania's loss.

It was a noticeable feature of the last few weeks that there was a decided falling off in exemption claims due to the presence of Reading boys in the trenches and the spring drive gathering on the west front.

An Italian boy, Creasany Crouge, who reported late to Mayor Filbert's board on Wednesday morning when the roll call was held at 9 o'clock, told the mayor he was so afraid he would be late and wouldn't be able to go into training that he felt like getting out to push the trolley car. He said also that he wanted to fight under the stars and stripes. He was commended for his patriotism.

The Reading boys who left on Wednesday afternoon, 17 from district No. 3 and 6 from district 4, were on their way at 3.30. There was a special train made up at Reading, when the drafted men from Shamokin and vicinity and Lebanon and vicinity met here. D. Lorah Mauger, district passenger agent of the Reading accompanied the special to Camp Meade.

It was expected that the boys will arrive at Camp at about 10.30 and they will have a hike from the station of from three to five miles.
